Prostate cancer and/or an enlarged prostate can cause reduced sexual ability as well as full-blown impotence. Benign Prostatic Hyperplasia (BHP) is characterized by an enlarged prostate; a noncancerous growth of the prostate gland. Testosterone converts into oestrogen by a process called aromatisation. Unfortunately, as men get older, there's a tendency for this process to speed up, turning more and more testosterone into oestrogen. If this happens your body makes more oestrogen than is good for your prostate and leaves too little testosterone behind. This raises the risk of both prostate enlargement and prostate cancer.

The harmful form of testosterone known as dihydro-testosterone (DHT) can disrupt hormonal health in both males and females. In men, the prostate gland is a prime target. When the 5-alpha reductase enzyme is overactive, it facilitates an excessive amount of DHT production and the epithelial cells that line the vessels in the prostate gland are then stimulated to divide and multiply. This causes an enlargement of the prostate (BPH), usually still benign at this stage. Currently, saw palmetto is promoted as a dietary supplement for urinary symptoms associated with an enlarged prostate gland (also called benign prostatic hyperplasia or BPH), as well as for chronic pelvic pain, migraine, hair loss, and other conditions. Dandelion and Willow herb assist in controlling urinary issues and voiding the bladder
