Parabens in nature: We do our best to find alternatives for parabens but: Parabens are one of the most abundant organic acids found in nature. Plants stay free of pathogenic infections, thanks to parabens they contain. Decomposed fruit then recycles with the parabens that break down into the soil to keep it healthy too. So why condemn them? 90% of our parabens come from dietary sources, such as mangoes, grenadillas, green tea, strawberries, etc. (Products claiming to be free of parabens that actually contain these ingredients are not telling the whole truth – or they do not contain the genuine mangoes, green tea, etc.) Parabens are one of the most abundant organic acids found in nature.

We are obliged to ensure a shelf life of many years for our products. It is our responsibility to prevent disintegration or contamination of each item. This is achieved by using ingredients that have a good safety profile and are not toxic or irritating. Herbal ingredients have many benefits and we include a lot of them in the form of: tinctures, freshly harvested plant material, decoctions and essential oils. Natural is best, but we have to preserve it somehow.
